ARCHITECTURAL DESCRIPTION

Ridge Street was once one of the finest residential areas in the city, and the Bibb-Wolfe House is one of the oldest houses on the street. It is an extremely simple two story, three bay, central hall plan, brick structure with a flemish bond front, mouse-tooth cornice, and stepped end gables. The windows are detailed with a simple wooden architraves and flat lintels. The entrance door with its rectangular transom and sidelights is extremely fine.

HISTORICAL DESCRIPTION

In 1847, John H. Bibb bought between three and four acres of land from Allen H. Hawkins for $1,000. (ACDB 50-4750. Alexander believed that the house was built for and once occupied by John H. Bibb. In 1852, Bibb conveyed 1 7/16 acres of land to Worthington Johnson who later in 1852 sold Ezra M. Wolfe a "certain house and lot of ground near Charlottesville and situated on Ridge Street," (ACDB 51-159). In 1853 Wolfe bought the adjoining lot still held by Bibb (ACDB 51-304). In 1882, Ezra M. Wolfe's executor sold the property to Mrs. Artie Scribner (ACDB 85-398). The property has had 5 owners in this century and is currently used a a rental property.

ARCHITECTURAL DESCRIPTION

One of the oldest houses on Ridge Street, the Bibb-Wolfe House is a 2-storey, 3-bay, single-pile, vernacular house set on an English basement. It is constructed of brick set in Flemish bond. Its mousetooth cornice and roof parapet are elements of the Federal style which was common in the earlier decades of the nineteenth century, while its entrance reflects the later Greek Revival style. The medium pitched gable roof is covered with standing-seam metal. There are two interior end chimneys. Windows are double-sash, 6-over-6 light, with lintels and corner blocks. They are about the same height at both levels. Basement windows are short, 3-over-3 light, without lintels. A one-storey, one-bay entrance porch shelters the central bay of the facade. It has a nearly flat shed roof with an entablature with dentil moulding, supported by square pillars with inset panels. Early 1900's photographs show a heavy one-story Colonial Revival verandah covering the facade. The present entrance porch is probably more like the original one. The 6-paneled entrance door with its fluted pilasters and rectangular transom and sidelights is extremely fine.

HISTORICAL DESCRIPTION

Alexander believed that this house "was built for, and once occupied by John H. Bibb" who purchased a three-to four-acre tract from Allan W. Hawkins in 1844 (ACDB 42-77). Its Flemish-bond brickwork, stepped gables, and mousetooth cornice would seem to date the house several decades earlier, but there is no evidence of that in the records. Tax records list the building the first year that the tract appears in Bibb's name, but do not show any building of comparable value during Hawkins's ownership. Ezra M. Wolfe bought the house in 1852 (ACDB 50-475, 51-159 & 304) and owned it until 1882 (ACDB 85-398). Before Irene and Ralph Allen bought it in 1958 (City DB 208-184), the longest owner was W. F. Souder, who owned and occupied it from 1916 until 1948 (DB 28-167, 140-181). The Allens use the house as rental property. Additional References: City DB 20-311.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

Built at least as early as 1845, the Bibb-Wolfe House was one of the first houses built on Ridge Street. Today, there are three houses remaining from the 1840's. Of them, this house has been the least altered. It presents an interesting combination of the Federal (roof parapet, mousetooth cornice) and Greek Revival (entrance) styles and lends variety to the streetscape.

This house is one of the most important buildings in the Ridge Street Historic District, and it has already been designated individually as a local historic landmark.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

Built at least as early as 1845, the Bibb-Wolfe House was one of the first houses built on Ridge Street. Today, there are three houses remaining from the 1840's. Of them, this house has been the least altered. It presents an interesting combination of the Federal (roof parapet, mousetooth cornice) and Greek Revival (entrance) styles and lends variety to the streetscape.

This house is one of the most important buildings in the Ridge Street Historic District, and it has already been designated individually as a local historic landmark.

IV. Historical Description

The Ridge Street area was originally part of Alexander Garrett's Oak Hill estate, which was located between the Belmont and Oak Lawn estates and south of the town of Charlottesville. Garrett was an associate of Thomas Jefferson and played an important role in the founding of the University of Virginia. His house was located on present Garrett Street, opposite East Second Street. He began selling off lots along "the road to William Henning's old still house" (5th Street SW), on the western edge of his tract, in the late 1820s (Albemarle County Deed Book 28-287, 289). A few years later he began selling lots along Ridge Street, which was then known as "the Ridge Road leading to Meriwether's Mill" (ACDB 40-68). In an 1873-1874 series of articles, James Alexander, editor of The Jeffersonian Republican, wrote that there were no houses on the street before 1835. (These articles were reprinted as Early Charlottesville: Recollections of James Alexander, 1828-1874, ed. Mary Rawlings, 1942.)

Most of the earliest houses on Ridge Street were in the Federal style, or were vernacular structures with some Federal details. The James B. Hawkins House at 529 Ridge Street (demolished circa 1972) may have been the oldest house on the street. The Dunkum-Spooner-Brown House at 409 Ridge Street was one of the first houses built and is the oldest one still standing. Elijah Dunkum built this side-hall-parlor plan Federal house in 1842 and the next year built the more sophisticated Dunkum-Dice House at 301 Ridge Street (demolished in 1965). The Fitch-Gleason House at 528 Ridge Street was also built around 1842, but was set so far back from the street that Alexander did not mention it in his 1874 description of the neighborhood. In 1844 the Methodist Church built a house on the street for the Presiding Elder of the district, and replaced it with the house now standing at 401 Ridge Street around 1891. The Bibb-Wolfe House at 505 Ridge Street is another Federal-style building from this early period and was built around 1845.

Ridge Street was a racially integrated neighborhood from the very beginning, with several free black families owning homes there in the 1840s and 1850s. Robert Battles, most likely a relative of Revolutionary War soldier Shadrack Battles, owned property on the east side of Ridge Street as early as 1842. Nancy Kinney and her family owned and occupied a house that stood on the site of 705 or 709 Ridge Street for over half a century beginning in 1853. Also in the 1840s, a free black community was developing just east of Ridge Street on Lankford Avenue.

In the mid-1850s, Colonel John Bowie Strange acquired a large tract of land on the eastern side of Ridge Street for his Albemarle Military Institute. His holdings totalled about seven acres and extended from Lankford Avenue northward nearly as far as present Elliott Avenue. Col. Strange was killed in the Civil War, and the Institute did not re-open. The property was sold and subdivided, but one of the major buildings has survived; Col. Strange's vernacular Greek Revival residence at 632 Ridge Street. It and the brick schoolhouse that stood on the site of 702 Ridge Street were built for the Institute by one of Thomas Jefferson's master builders, William B. Phillips, around 1855.

The Strange House and the Hodges-Gleason House at 510 Ridge Street, built in 1857, are the only Greek Revival structures now standing in the District. In the early years of the Civil War, a fine Gothic Revival dwelling, the Bailey-Parrott-Fowler Cottage, was built at the northern end of the District at 204 Ridge Street.

In the 1870s, as Charlottesville began to recover economically from the Civil War, development of Ridge Street accelerated. Alexander noted in 1874 that "the street is becoming quite a prominent drive for belles and beaux, as well as for pedestrian promenade" (Early Charlottesville). During this period Ridge Street became the principal residential area of the city's merchants and businessmen, while doctors and lawyers lived on Park and High Streets and professors lived closer to the University. Residents of Ridge Street included the Gleason, Hawkins, Jarman, Yancey, Wheeler, Brown, Hartman and Updike families.

Notable among these merchant families were the Gleasons, a family whose members at one time or another occupied at least eleven houses on the street. John J. Gleason, who had bought and enlarged the Fitch-Gleason House at 528 Ridge Street in the early 1880s, and his son Henry Morris Gleason, who lived at 522 Ridge Street, had opened a general store on Main Street in 1871. They later expanded that into the local Stop & Shop Supermarket chain (sold in the early 1960s) and H. M. Gleason & Co., a feed and farm machinery firm that, after nearly 125 years of operation, is now one of Charlottesville's oldest businesses.

The Gleasons were closely allied with members of the Hawkins family, who were some of the earliest property owners on the street. Hugh R. Hawkins and his brothers Oscar E. and Clarence L. were partners in the dry goods firm of Hawkins Brothers & Co., established in 1896. Oscar and Clarence left the firm in 1941 and opened a rival store, O. E. and C. L. Hawkins. Both stores closed in the 1950s. All three brothers lived on Ridge Street. Hugh and his wife May Gleason lived at 518 Ridge Street, Oscar at 207 Ridge Street (no longer standing), and Clarence and his wife Elizabeth Gleason at 408 Ridge Street. Clarence Gleason built his house in 1915 in conjunction with the similar house of his brother-in-law, J. Emmet Gleason, next door.

It was common in other merchant families as well for many different members to live on Ridge Street. James E. Jarman, founder of the Jarman Book Company, later Jarman's Inc., lived in the house at 621 Ridge Street (demolished in 1973). He was succeeded in the business by his son Zach L. Jarman, who lived at 526 Ridge Street. An uncle and cousin of James lived at 711 and 715 Ridge Street. Jury Y. Brown and his brother Gilbert M. Brown, partners in the Brown Milling Company, lived at 409 and 515 Ridge Street. Eston Updike, one of the partners in the Updike Brickyard, built three houses on Ridge Street for himself and his family.

Other residents of note include G. Wallace Spooner, who lived at 409 Ridge Street and was one of the city's leading builders. He served as contractor for such buildings as Christ Church, Mt. Zion Baptist Church and alterations to the Albemarle County Courthouse. Bookstore owner Alexander C. Brechin built two vernacular Gothic Revival houses at 500 and 506 Ridge Street between about 1872 and 1881. W. T. Martin, founder of Martin Hardware Company, lived at 307 Ridge Street. Henry Balz, who owned a confectionary store, lived at 300 or 302 Ridge Street. The Martin and Balz houses have since been demolished.

The neighborhood continued to be racially mixed after the Civil War. Alexander's 1874 description mentions the home of William Brown at 308 Ridge Street, built the previous year. Henry Spears purchased a large lot in 1877 and lived in a house that stood on the site of 719 Ridge Street. The Mt. Zion Baptist congregation purchased a lot on Ridge Street north of the District in the early 1870s. Alexander spoke of their "large and flourishing church" in his Early Charlottesville essays. When a new church building was erected at 105 Ridge Street from 1883 to 1884, the congregation chose one of their white Ridge Street neighbors, G. Wallace Spooner, to design and build it. Many more African-Americans built houses in this period at the southern end of Ridge Street, outside the boundaries of the District. Predominantly black since the 1960s, Ridge Street remains an important residential area in the African-American community.

Ridge Street's growth period reached its zenith in the 1880s and 1890s with the construction of many large Victorian houses, such as the Leathers-Snyder House at 405 Ridge Street and the Brand-Hartman House at 407 Ridge Street. With the advent of the automobile at the turn of the century, however, other outlying areas such as Rugby Road began to gain in popularity.

By the mid-1920s, new construction on Ridge Street had tapered off. Young people who had grown up there chose other areas of town in which to build their own homes. Many of their parents stayed on, but when they died, their houses were sold or converted to rental property. By mid-century, the area was experiencing economic decline, and many of the larger houses had been divided into apartments.

Between the late 1950s and the early 1970s, eight of the ten houses in the 200 and 300 blocks were demolished, including the 1843 Dunkum-Dice House and the 1873 William Brown House. The realignment of Ridge Street and 5th Street in 1973 cut the neighborhood in two and caused the destruction of eleven more houses, among them some of the oldest on the street.

Despite these disturbances, Ridge Street has retained much of its original character. In the last fifteen years only one house in the District has been demolished, while at least seven nineteenth-century houses have been rehabilitated. The streetscape of the 400 block and northern part of the 500 block has remained remarkably unchanged, as has the 700 block and further southward beyond the district boundary. Small houses now stand in some wide side yards on the eastern side of the street, and street widening has reduced the size of some front yards; but on the whole, the houses and yards and trees still give one a sense of what the neighborhood was like in its prime.

One of the oldest houses on Ridge Street, the Bibb-Wolfe House is a 2-story, 3-bay, single-pile ~~structure~~ vernacular house set on an English basement.

The foundation & side & rear walls are constructed of brick laid in 5-course American bond, while the facade is in Flemish bond. ~~The house has a~~ ~~stepped gables~~ ~~which~~ ~~is~~ ~~not~~ ~~at~~ ~~all~~ ~~more~~ ~~common~~ in the earlier decades of the nineteenth century, while its entrance is Greek Revival.

The medium pitched gable roof is covered with standing-seam metal. There are <sup>two</sup> interior end chimneys.

Alexander believed that this house "was built for, & once ~~this house~~ occupied by, John H. Bibb" who purchased ~~a~~ a three to four acre tract from Allan W. Hawkins in 1844 (ACDB 42-77).

Flemish bond brickwork, its stepped gables, & mouse-tooth cornice would seem to date ~~the~~ <sup>the house</sup> several decades earlier, but there is no evidence of that in the records. Tax records ~~does~~ list the building the first year that the tract appears in Bibb's name, but do not show any building of comparable value during Hawkins's ownership.

~~John Bibb sold the house & half the acreage to~~ Ezra M. Wolfe bought the house in 1852 (ACDB 50-475, 51-159 & 304) & owned it until 1882 (ACDB 85-398). Before Irene & Ralph Allen bought it in 1958 (City DB 208-184), the longest owner was W. F. Sander, who owned & occupied it from 1916 until 1948 (DB 28-167, 140-181). The Allens use the house <sup>as</sup> for rental property.
